Coins rapidly becoming tokens

editorial/opinion

News that South Africa is bowing to the inevitable and is about to introduce cheaper coins, pale imitations of the current series, is just the latest example of a world phenomenon. Coins in most countries basically have become tokens representing almost no value. What little value they do represent often erodes rapidly.

World inflation has brought this situation about, but so too has the idea that everyone ought to feel rich and have a wad of paper money to stuff in his pocket. Where hourly, daily — even weekly — wages could once be counted out with a few coins of relatively high value, paying wages in coins today would give employers and employees hernias.

Some would argue that taking precious metals out of coinage made this outcome certain, and there is much truth to this view. However, in all of the monetary reforms that have occurred in recent years, no country has ever introduced high-value coins. New coins of new denominations start out cheap and become worthless.

Is it any wonder that collecting coins doesn't have quite the glamour it once did? We have gone from pieces of eight — high-value stuff when it was current — to parking meter money.

It is said that when Winston Churchill traveled abroad as a private citizen in the days before he became Britain's prime minister that he liked to use sovereigns, the internationally recognized standard of value — and a high value it was. It was a quaint idea when he did it, because the use of paper was overwhelming, but it was possible. Nowadays such a preference seems ludicrous.

The words coins and cheap still go together in the public mind. Ever see a person casually interested in coinage blanch at the high prices when introduced to "such little pieces" of gold? These are not rare pieces, either, just average hullion coins. Its about the same reaction as if he had been told a New York subway token was intrinsically valuable and would cost him $100 to buy.

We are not likely to see puhlic perception of coins and their relative values change much from their present low station. High value coins for everyday use seem to be permanently relegated to history.

How do you get estimates?

readers' soapbox

Editor:

I have an iron 10 pfennig 1916 German coin, KM-20. It is listed in the Standard Catalog of World Coins as "Rare" in any condition.

I cannot get any estimate on the value of the coin. How do you establish a fair price (for insurance or market purposes) for such a piece? It has been graded as extra fine.

R. M. Burrage
Bellaire, Texas

Editor's Note: You will need to have this coin authenticated before a value can be assigned. Check with some of our advertizers that specialize in German coins. They will tell you how much it is worth, if genuine. The dealer will need to inspect the coin. For a fee, they will provide you with a written estimate of the coin's value once they have inspected it.

South Africa to issue new plated coins

New coins have been unveiled by the finance minister of the Republic of South Africa, the Natal Daily News reports. Barend du Plessis stated at a news conference that a new two rand coin that is slightly bigger than the present 10 cent piece would be introduced in November.

Composition of the new coin would be a copper core plated with nickel. There presently is no two rand coin in general circulation. Previously, the denomination had been used for a sovereign-size gold coin.

The new two rand piece will be a part of a phased replacement of the present series of coinage with a new one. High inflation and metallic values higher than face values on the lower denominations currently made of pure nickel are prompting action.

A five rand coin of a composition similar to the two rand piece will be introduced within three years.

Also changing is the one rand denomination. The present pure nickel piece will be succeeded by a smaller coin with the nickel-plated copper core.

Denominations below one rand, the one cent, two cent, five cent, 10 cent, 20 cent and 50 cent coins are also to be made of cheaper compositions.

New one cent, two cent and five cent coins will have a steel core plated with copper. The two lower denominations will be smaller than current size, while the five cent piece will be larger, about the size of current 10 cent pieces. The current five cent coin is made of pure nickel, while the two lower denominations are brass and bronze, respectively.

A copper-tin alloy plating on steel cores will give 10 cent, 20 cent and 50 cent coins a yellowish color. All of these denominations will be smaller than current coins, which are currently made of pure nickel.

Edges of the new one cent, two cent and five cent coins will be smooth, while the edges of the 10 cent, 20 cent and 50 cent coins will be milled. It was not specified as to what kind of edge the one, two and five rand coins would have.

Introduction of the new coins will be accompanied by the gradual withdrawal of the old coins. Apparently, though, the government will not attempt to call in the old one cent and two cent coins.

Exact dates for introduction of the new coins was not specified. However, it was reported that a new mint at Verwoerdburg's Gateway Park was about to open and its major task would be the striking of five cent coins.

Designs for the new coins were not announced, but the one cent, two cent and five cent coins would feature birds and the 10 cent, 20 cent and 50 cent coins would featured flowers set in square frames.

Coin shortages are currently plaguing the country. Hoarding of nickel coins has been reported in World Coin News previously.

Current exchange value of the rand is just over 36 U.S. cents on the commercial rate, 24 cents on the financial rate.

U.S. Mint attends Hong Kong

The United States Mint will be exhibiting the new Congressional Bicentennial commemorative coins for the first time outside of the continental United States at the Sept. 6-8 Hong Kong International Coin Show, according to show coordinator, Ron Gillio. In addition, the U.S. Mint will be displaying a large range of coins and medals, joining mint representatives from Singapore, Pobjoy, Mexico, China, etc. who have previously announced their participation in this important international event.

Mr. Gillio also announced that only seven bourse tables were still available on a strict first come — first served basis, and a few spaces are open on the six-day Beijing/Shanghai optional tour.

On a recent trip to Hong Kong to finalize all of the arrangements, Ron Gillio received the invitation extended by Mr. Shen of ChinaGold Coins for all of those on the optional mainland tour to be the guests of the China Mint for a gala banquet on their last evening in Beijing. On the following day, the group will tour the China Mint in Shanghai.

"Every effort is being made to make the September Hong Kong International Coin Show, auction and special programs one of the most memorable annual events on the numismatic calender," summed up Mr. Gillio. As a sign of local cooperation, the Hong Kong Tourist Association will be attending the show, marking the first time they are participating in a numismatic event.

Mullins heads Nashville coin club

By Paul M. Green

World coin clubs are not exactly common in the United States. What few exist would be logical in the major cities where significant foreign shows are located. While not insignificant by any means, Nashville, Tenn. does not exactly leap to mind as the most likely location of a world coin club. That said, Nashville is the home of one of the nation's more interesting and reportedly enjoyable world coin clubs. At the head of the club is Dave Mullins who discussed the Nashville club and why it's been such a success.

WCN: How did you get started in coins?

Mullins: When I was little, we lived in a rural community in south central Tennessee. The soldiers were training there. I was told they were going to France, but I really don't know. The local people weren't supposed to give them food or anything but my mother felt sorry for them and would send me out with lemonade because she knew they wouldn't do anything to me. They gave me some coins and that sparked my interest. There were Chinese and French coins in there and I guess that was the beginning, when I was 4 or 5 years old.

WCN: So it was actually world coins.

Mullins: Yes, it was the fact that they were different, but they just sat around for years in little boxes while I went through the stages of penny albums and all that.

When I got out of college, I lived in north Alabama for a year or two, near Huntsville. On Sunday afternoon, I'd go to a Huntsville coin shop. I was looking at American coins and noticed these beautiful German coins at about 1/10th of the price of U.S. coins, and that's where I really got started on foreign coins.

WCN: So you started building a collection.

Mullins: I'll surprise you a bit; I've just about stopped collecting foreign coins. I've been collecting tokens more, Tennessee tokens. It's sort of the other extreme, something very local as opposed to world coins. I still do pick up a few foreign coins, so I haven't given up. It's just that I really enjoy the tokens with the local history.

WCN: OK, let's hear a little about this club. How did it get started?

Mullins: This is the third or fourth attempt at a foreign club in Nashville.

Dave Mullins (seated left) has to check out a few coins while waiting for the meeting to start. Other club members look on.

One gentleman who moved to Atlanta had been the backbone of the previous one, but when he moved it kind of dried up. One of the other members suggested we get it started again. I wasn't too thrilled because I knew there was a lot of work in it, but he kept at it, and then one of the coin dealers here offered his back room if we wanted to get it started. So we started meeting, and I ended up presiding over it.

The club as such doesn't have any officers. I more or less preside over the meetings and call each of the people who come once a month. I try to assign tasks to people if they will take them willingly. We've gradually grown to 20-25 collectors. We don't call them members, because we don't have membership rolls or anything. We take turns giving a program, which we try to alternate between ancient and modern coins. We meet in a public library on Saturday morning because we found out that was a good time for people from out of town, and they've come from as far away as 200 miles. Probably the most regular collector is from a town that's 80 to 90 miles away.

WCN: So they come from far and wide.

Mullins: Really, we don't have but about seven people from Nashville who are there, but it is a good central meeting place. We try real hard to always have one person who considers himself a dealer at the meeting, which gives us something to buy at the meetings.

WCN: Can you tell us a little about a typical meeting?

Mullins: We generally start off with anything people want to bring up about coin shows in the area or other business. It's usually not much. We have a gentleman who takes care of our money, which usually isn't much because as soon as we have enough to buy a coin book we buy it and give it to the library. Something I noticed a long time ago about coin clubs was that if you didn't have any money in the treasury, people don't argue over it much.

WCN: An interesting point, as sometimes you wonder if some clubs aren't more worried about managing the treasury than anything else.

Mullins: I think sometimes people do work too much on growth for the sake of growth. In fact, every club I've ever been in seems to spend half their time trying to figure out how to get more people there instead of enjoying the people they've got. I think the growth will take care of itself if you've got something worthwhile to offer.

WCN: So the treasury is a tad on the small side.

Mullins: I think about a month ago we had about the most we've ever had, which was up around $50, but then we bought an book on ancient coins, which took most of that. The next book will probably be the Krause Standard Catalog of World Coins. Generally we get most of the business done in about 10 minutes. I learned a long time ago that most people will go along with whatever you bring up so long as it's not ridiculous.

WCN: How do you get what limited funds you have?

Mullins: Everybody present at a meeting, other than the junior members, is asked to give 50 cents. That covers paying for the cost of the meeting room. What's left goes to cover the cost of the "FREEDOM PANDAS" ISSUED AT 1989 HONG KONG INT'L COIN EXPO!

THE FIRST "REAL LIFE" PANDAS ISSUED BENEFIT WORLD WILDLIFE FUND FOR NATURE

Pictured above is the beautiful 5 Ounce Proof Silver Panda "Lunar Year" Commemorative issued for the 8th Annual Hong Kong Int'l Coin Expo. Sales of the special Pandas benefited the World Wildlife Fund. See full details of this special Panda issue below, and of this limited offer to the collecting public of a very small quantity of these rare and precious Silver Pandas.

SALE OF ROYAL MINT PANDAS AIDS CHARITY - NOT COMMUNISM!

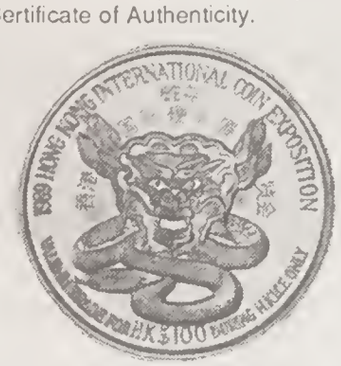
Commemorative Pandas have been issued for the Hong Kong Int'l Coin Expo each year since 1984. But this year's Panda marks the first time that a true-to-life numismatic Panda has been issued. The Pandas on all previous issues have been more like cartoon characters - but the Giant Panda lovably gracing the obverse of the 1989 HKICE piece is absolutely as a real live Panda.

This outstanding Panda was minted in incredible Proof quality by the world renown British Royal Mint. Never before has such a beautiful Panda Commemorative been produced. And following the tradition instituted last year at the HKICE, the piece is also a lunar year commemorative - with the Chinese Characters for "Year of the Snake" on the reverse and a massive Serpent entwined around the Dragon Logo of the Expo. Featured also on the reverse is the mint mark of the British Royal Mint.

The management of the Hong Kong Int'l Coin Expo was particularly proud that for the first time the Commemorative Pandas marked an effort on behalf of the noble animal featured on the coin itself, for each of the 5 Ounce Pandas issued at the Hong Kong Int'l Coin Expo included a donation to the work of the World Wildlife Fund for Nature in Hong Kong. The spirit is expressed by the Commemorative Panda itself, for the legend on the obverse translates to "Hong Kong Supports the World Wildlife Fund for Nature".

LOW MINTAGE - AND A VERY LIMITED AVAILABILITY!

In Silver, only 1000 of the Magnificent 5 Ounce Pandas were issued, so it is certainly destined to be a rare and desirable item. Due to the special terms of this Panda issue, all 1000 of the Silver Pieces were offered for sale at the Expo. But as it is our desire to keep everyone informed as to the events and happenings at the only genuine and original Hong Kong International Coin Expo, we were able to acquire a limited number of the 1000 Silver Pieces so that these advertisements could be placed. Use the coupon at the right to order at only $125 each as long as our small supply lasts. The beautiful Panda you receive will be complete with Royal Mint Presentation Case and numbered Certificate of Authenticity.



SILVER TRADE PANDA ALSO ISSUED

The first Silver Trade Panda ever issued debuted at the 1989 Hong Kong Int'l Coin Expo, as the partner to the magnificent 5 Ounce Panda described above The One Ounce Pure Silver Trade Coin had a H.K. $100 Trade Value during the course of the expo. A small number of these coins have been obtained for the purpose of this ad - and as the first such Panda Trade Coin they should be avidly sought after by interested collectors. As the quantity available is small, they will be sold on a first-come, first served basis at only $25 each.

books we buy. If we only have seven or eight people there, we sometimes have to chip in a little extra.

After the business, we have a program, which will generally run anywhere from 20 to 40 minutes. We have the library for two hours, which leaves us an hour to swap, buy, sell or whatever. We don't tell collectors of American coins that they aren't welcome, but we see very few of them.

Like all clubs, we have trouble getting young members, although we do have two or three who are regulars. From time to time they've given programs and really done a very good job of it. We also have a couple people who really aren't coin collectors but who come just because they enjoy the programs. I tell people when they're going to do a program not to do something which strains you to research. Do something you know, and if it's interesting to you, it's more likely to be interesting to other people. Some members, when they've given their programs, have had things typed up with statistics and dates and that kind of thing.

WCN: So basically, new members find you.

Mullins: Well, a couple of the coin shops here in Nashville are pretty good about referring their customers to us. Then many of the members will invite new people when they meet them at coins shows or whatever in the area. We also have a pretty good size flea market in Nashville, and some of the dealers there have been helpful in finding new members. Right now it's harder and harder to find people in this area who collect foreign coins who have never attended one of the meetings.

WCN: Well, Nashville isn't a place most people would immediately assume would be a good place for a foreign coin club.

Mullins: In my own mind, I figure for every world coin collector who goes to a meeting, there are probably five or six who have never been and who don't want to go. A lot of people just really don't like to be in clubs. You have to really give them something that will help them, something they'll enjoy.

WCN: Do the dealers in the area have much of a world coin inventory?

Mullins: Not really, but some of the people who come to the meetings bring a lot of coins. Right now, probably half of the members are more interested in ancients than they are in modern, and I would guess most ancient collectors acquire a lot of their coins by mail. Sometimes I see some pretty good size deals being swapped back and forth between some of these ancient collectors. The reason I got into tokens was that I had about bought all the modern foreign coins which I wanted and could afford. I've never been one to want one of every type or country. If a coin strikes me as very attractive, that's the reason I want it, and I couldn't afford the ones which I still wanted.

WCN: Interesting, your collecting is somewhat unstructured, not unlike the club. Maybe that appeals to people.

Mullins: Well, it seems to work for us, but it still takes a lot of work. I take about two hours each month calling people. We do that because we found that if you called it was about twice as effective in getting people to come.

WCN: Is there any talk of investment as well as collecting?

Mullins: Not that I'm aware of. We mention quite often that it's our view that foreign coins are really a good place to get ruined if you're buying coins for investment. I personally think they're a terrible investment, but they're a lot of fun.

WCN: Whatever it is you're doing must be working. It sounds like a fairly happy group.

Mullins: We've never had a spat.

WCN: And you seem to keep politics out of it.

Mullins: You have to do that. I keep offering to let somebody else preside, but nobody has taken me up on it yet, but they're welcome to any time.

WCN: And it sounds like you've got a pretty active little buying and selling hour that must be fun.

Mullins: I've had more than one dealer tell me he had sold more at a single meeting of the club than he had at coin shows. Of course that's not so every time they come.

WCN: Aren't you a little concerned about security, though, with all these people bringing coins?

Mullins: To my knowledge, we've only ever had one guy who lost a coin, and he wasn't sure he lost it at the meeting. Other than that one instance, we've never had any trouble at all. For the most part, we don't take our collections unless we're giving a talk on them.

WCN: So they are just bringing duplicates.

Mullins: Right, or coins they want to sell, things like that. For the most part, people are looking for something to buy and the dealers are there just like a coin show. We give them a table to set up at and arrange them in a circle and with the people we have, I'd let them look through my collection and not worry about any of them. It used to be that way at shows around here. You'd look through someone's coins and they wouldn't even be there. Then about the mid-1960s things changed. We're like an old-fashioned coin show, kind of a show and tell thing, a little different from a more structured thing.

WCN: What advice would you give someone considering starting their own foreign coin club?

Mullins: They should get with a couple other people who are willing to help because it's going to take some work and effort. The whole thing will have to be done for enjoyment.

WCN: I would gather you and the others are enjoying it.

Mullins: Yes, the club itself is as much enjoyment to me as the coins I pick up.

During a meeting swap session buyers scoop up some bargains. Nearly everyone brings coins to the meeting to sell, swap or show.

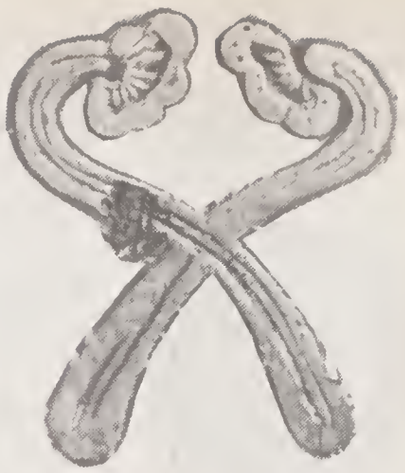
The riddle of Taiwan's military ration dollars



By Jeff Caseria

Without relevant historical documents and mint records, numismatists may encouter great difficulty determining the date and location of minting for some coins. China's military ration dollars listed in the Standard Catalogue of World Coins (Krause, 1989) as Craig#25-4 and Kann#5 fit this category of difficult to attribute coins.

In order to arrive at a plausible account of the events leading up to each coin's issuance, we need to piece together the clues provided by the inscriptions and designs on these coins with the known history of the places where we usually find these coins.

Although many numismatists think that the government of China's Qing dynasty (1644-1911) authorized the minting of the ration dollars in question, an important clue indicates otherwise. The Qing dynasty government as a rule included the mint name and the title of the current emperor's reign on the coins it issued. Indeed, silver ration dollars minted by Qing dynasty authorities on Taiwan during an uprising there in the 1830's carry the reign title "Daoguang" (1821-1850) on the obverse, and the Manchurian language inscription on the reverse identifies the mint location as Taiwan.

Since the military ration dollars under investigation carry neither a mint mark nor a reign title, it seems unlikely that China's government authorized their issuance. But if the Qing dynasty rulers didn't issue these pieces, who did? To solve this problem, we should start by examining the coins themselves more closely.

The Standard Catalogue of World Coins provides the mint date of 1853 and probable mint location of Taiwan for ration dollar Craig#25-4, but offers no explanation of the coin's design. The obverse of this 1853 silver piece carries the likeness of a flower bowl with the character "bao," meaning treasure, inscribed on it. The flower bowl probably symbolizes the accumulation of wealth by comparing getting rich with the blooming of flowers. To the right of the bowl, the two characters for "fu-ku," meaning government treasury read top to bottom, and the characters "jun-xiang," which mean military rations, appear to the left of the bowl.

The reverse displays the likeness of two crossed lotus scepters. The Chinese call this kind of scepter "ru-yi," which also means to have things happen as you wish they would. Ru-yi scepters represent the Buddha. To the right of the crossed lotus scepters appear the two characters "zu-wen," which mean sterling, and the left side carries the characters "tong-xing," meaning currency. Below the crossed scepters is chopped the character "liu," for six, and this probably means that the piece contains six qian (mace) of silver. Just above where the scepters cross, the characters "sheng ping" are stamped reading right to left. Sheng-ping means peace and prosperity and many people think that these two characters identified the manufacturer of the pieces.

The crossed lotus scepters may have had symbolic significance in the context of the secret society widespread on Taiwan called the Heaven and Earth Society (Tian-Di Hui). The Heaven and Earth Society, like other Qing dynasty secret societies, formed after emperor Kang Xi (1662-1722) completed the Manchu conquest of China by defeating the remnants of the Ming dynasty (1368-1644).

Many Chinese who had fought to oust the invading Manchus went underground to form secret organizations dedicated to over-throwing the Manchu Qing dynasty and restoring the Ming dynasty. Five Buddhist monks in Fujian province's Shaolin temple founded the Heaven and Earth Society, and from Fujian it spread to Taiwan, Zhejiang, Jiangsu, Gungdong, Guangxi and Hunan provinces. The members of this society used an array of secret symbols and rituals which conceivably included the crossed lotus scepters in view of the organization's Buddhist origins.

The capture of Nanjing by the Taiping rebels in 1853 made the fall of the Qing dynasty appear imminent, and encouraged various factions of the Heaven and Earth Society to rise up in arms against the Qing dynasty. One such faction in Taiwan's Fengshan district (now Gaoxing district) rallied behind their leader Li Gong and beseiged Tainan, which at that time served as the seat of government for Taiwan province.

Guangxi and Hunan factions of the Heaven and Earth Society had already seized control of most of Guangxi in 1850, and they began proclaiming a new era called "Sheng-Ping" (Peace and Prosperity) about the time the Taiping rebels occupied Nanjing. The two characters that the Guangxi insurgents used for the name of their new era are identical to the two characters "Sheng-Ping" chopped on the 1853 lotus scepter ration dollars from Taiwan.

The Taiwan Heaven and Earth Society must have also proclaimed this new era of Peace and Prosperity, and Lin Gong used silver from the Tainan treasury to reward his followers by issuing to them the lotus scepter silver pieces stamped with the characters "Sheng-Ping."

Attributing the 1853 lotus scepter coins, poses less of a challenge to the investigating numismatist than does the Chinese military ration dollar listed as Kann#5. The Standard Catalog of World Coins offers little information and no date for this piece. The two characters "jun-xiang" (military rations) read right to left across the upper portion of the obverse of this coin. Below these two characters we find two more characters written vertically in grass style and pronounced "jin-shen." Jin-shen literally means to exercise caution in word and deed. To the right and left of the jin-shen legend are chopped the characters "chang" (prosperous) and "xie" (harmonious) respectively.

The upper portion of the reverse bears the characters "zuwen" (sterling) written left to right, and below this appear the characters "tong-xing" (currency) written vertically. Several rosettes of either four or five petals appear on both the obverse and the reverse, and some pieces carry six-petaled rosettes. A few pieces bear a swastika (wan) which in China serves as a symbol of Buddhism.

Since the Qing dynasty government didn't issue coins with Buddhist symbols, it seems that the Heaven and Earth Society could have minted these pieces. Indeed, the word jin-shen seems decidedly appropriate for coins minted by a secret society. Since most of these coins come from tombs in southern Taiwan, we should search for clues in the events of some earlier uprising of the Heaven and Earth Society on Taiwan.

One of the most important of the earilier rebellions on Taiwan and the most likely source of the jin-shen military ration dollars is the rebellion of Lin Shuang-Wen in 1786. Lin Shuang-Wen, like many secret society members on Taiwan at that time, was actually a native of Zhangzhou in Fujian province. This could account the variety of jin-shen coins that carry the legend "Zhangzhou junxiang" which means Zhangzhou military rations.

The rebellion of Lin Shuang-Wen began when Qing dynasty officials arrested and executed a number of innocent people in an attempt to suppress disorder caused by secret society infighting. These executions outraged the members of the Heaven and Earth Society who then rallied behind their leader Lin Shuang-Wen in a small town near Zhanghua, Taiwan. Three hundred Qing troops went to quell this uprising but could not distinquish secret society members from non-members and so they slaughtered more innocent people.

The obverse of Kann#5 shows the legend "jin-shen" in grass script with the characters "chang" and "xie" chopped to the right and left of it respectively.

The reverse of the jin-shen piece (Kann#5), the legend says ster ling silver currency (zu-wen tong-xing).

Lin Shuang-Wen and his enraged men then attacked and exterimainted the three hundred Qing troops, and two days later captured Zhanghua. In Zhanghua, Lin Shuang-Wen issued a call to arms for the purpose of restoring the Ming dynasty, and the Heaven and Earth Society took control of most of Taiwan.

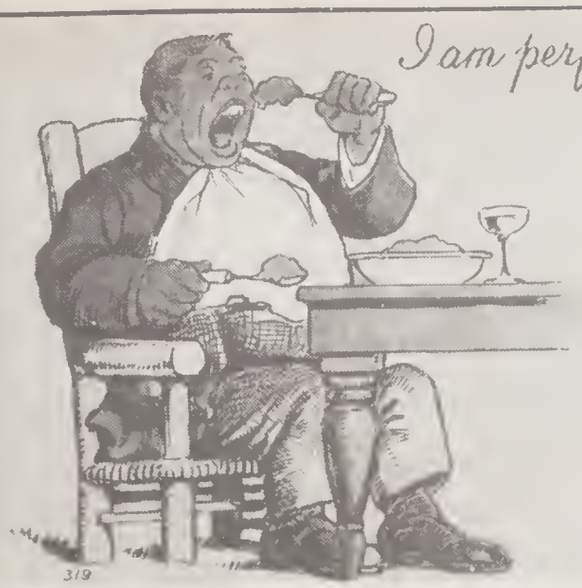
When the Heaven and Earth Society besieged Tainan, Qing dynasty officials there successfully induced a faction of the rebels led by Zhuang Xi-She to surrender.

Zhuang Xi-She and his men came from Quanzhou in Fujian, and because of regional rivalry, they felt no great loyalty to Lin Shuang-Wen or other men from Zhang-zhou. Therefore, the Qing officials could entice Zhuang Xi-She to surrender by offering him a large reward in silver bullion. However, when Zhuang Xi-She left Tainan after collecting his reward, a Zhangzhou faction of the Heaven and Earth Society captured him. Lin Shuang-Wen then had plenty of silver with which to mint the jin-shen military ration dollars for his followers.

Both the rebellion of Lin Shuang-Wen and the rebellion of Lin Gong ended in failure, but the coins they issued remained in the hands of the people. Since these coins have come down to us without any written records of where they were minted or who minted them, we cannot attempt to attribute them without first carefully reviewing all the evidence.

In short, three important pieces of evidence show that the Heaven and Earth Society issued these coins and not China's Manchu government. First, neither of the two coins carries a mint mark or the current emperor's reign title as did coins issued by the Manchus. Second, the words "sheng-ping" and "jin-shen" make more sense in the context of the Heaven and Earth Society. Third, Buddhist symbols did not appear on coins issued by the Manchus, but are appropriate for a secret society founded by Buddhist monks.

Numismatists, like professional historians, often find themselves doing detective work. When they lack primary documents for the minting of a coin, investigating numismatists must attempt to reconstruct the events by making use of any available information. Using this method, we can obtain a reasonable account of when, where and why Taiwan's military ration dollars were minted. Although this method may seem troublesome to many people, puzzling over a coin's origin is all part of the fun of numismatics.



The weather is very pleasant during the month of September so we opted to sit out this Hong Kong show. Call or write, we're around enjoying Alabama.

Swedish plate money hoard discovered

By Richard H. Ponterio

Editor's Note: Ponterio and Associates recently acquired a large hoard of salvaged Swedish plate money. The following story tells how the approximately 3,000 pieces of plate money were lost and then discovered over 200 years later.

The "Nicobar," a 47-meter cargo vessel belonging to the Danish East India Co., sailed from the roadstead of Copenhagen on June 21, 1782, bound for the Danish trading posts in the Nicobar Islands and along the coast of India. The "Nicobar" proceeded to Helsingför (Cronborg) and Kullen in Sweden to pick up cargo; contrary winds forced the ship to return to Cronborg before reaching and returning from Sweden where cargo was taken aboard — copper for trade, in the form of obsolete Swedish plate money. "Nicobar" finally cleared Scandinavian waters for the East on July 23, under the guidance of Captain Crisji (or Chrystie, as recorded by an English translator).

The cargo ship proceeded to the Madeira Islands, arriving there in mid-September, again hampered by contrary winds. Shortly after leaving these waters, "Nicobar" encountered the doldrums, in which winds were erratic, wispy, or non-existent for days on end. Many of the crew became ill with scurvy, which changed to spotted fever among some of the men; for others, their ailment became "putrefication fever." All in all, most of the crewmen were unable to fulfill their duties. "Nicobar" met several other ships during this time, several offering advice on seeking port in Brazil for rest and recuperation; one English captain provided a small number of oranges for the members of the crew.

Captain Crisji asked for guidance from the council of the ship (the mates), suggesting they head for the coast of Guinea (present day Ghana) where there was a Danish fort from which they could obtain provisions and new crewmen. The mates agreed to this, and every effort was made towards this goal. The ship's assistant, M. Jörgensen, wrote of these times in 1794, saying:

"Even though we were aware of the weakness of the others, we were encouraged to work so if one fell down and could not stand up immediately, the other would take his place."

Jörgensen also became seriously ill, as did the other officers; at one point, only one seaman had the strength to go aloft to tend the sails. The medical condition of the crewmen continued to deteriorate as there were no medicines or provisions aboard to treat or relieve the effects of the varied illness of the crew members.

On Jan. 16, 1783, land was spotted in the distance: the crewmen reckoned the ship to be off the coast of Guinea, but they had no clear idea of their exact location. On the following day, six canoes, each with 12 to 14 natives, approached "Nicobar." The crewmen attempted to put up a fierce front by manning the deck guns and bearing other weapons, but their thin ranks and poor condition did not allay their fear of the natives. Jörgensen wrote: "(...among them was one who could speak a little English), asked us many questions — if we were English, if we had sailed a long time, and if we had many sick. When these questions were answered, they were not bold enough to come aboard."

The crew learned that the land they saw was Cap Apollonia, which meant a Dutch settlement was not too far to the east. On the 18th, "Nicobar" came near the fort in question, fired a cannon, and observed a canoe coming from the shore to enquire about them. The fort was called Axim, and the people there had feared "Nicobar" to have been an English ship at first.

Farmers from the Stelltenbosch district had plundered the cargo that washed ashore.

On the following day, "Nicobar" anchored close to the fort, saluted it, and received a return salute. The governor sent out a canoe with greetings and a variety of provisions. After resting and reprovisioning for a few days, "Nicobar" set sail on Jan. 23, arriving at the main Dutch fort in the area, D'Elmina, on the 25th. The governor general offered assistance in the form of new crew members, but Captain Crisji decided to sail to the nearby Danish fort of Christiansborg to obtain new crewmen; "Nicobar" arrived there on the 28th.

The Danish governor general was advised of the conditions of the ship and of the ordeal undertaken in the voyage. Letters were sent back to the Dutch governor at D'Elmina and the English fort at Cab-Corse requesting seamen to replace the dead or seriously ill of the "Nicobar"; at last, 14 men were sent from D'Elmina, but some of these had no previous seafaring experience. Several capable men were obtained from another ship at Christiansborg and from the governor there. All of the new men were hired for the duration of the voyage, taking their oath from the governor in the presence of Captain Crisji and others of the crew. As "Nicobar" had lost two anchors in the roadstead of Akra (Accra), they obtained replacements from the governor general at Christiansborg.

On March 12, "Nicobar" sailed from the coast of Guinea for South Africa; the crew numbered 36. Until arriving in False Bay, South Africa, on May 20, there were no problems with the ship or the weather. The day after arriving at False Bay, however, the men who had joined "Nicobar" in Christiansborg refused to continue work. Captain Crisji ordered the first mate to complain to the captain of a Danish warship known to be in the area, but, after realizing that they did not know when assistance might arrive from that source, accepted the fact that these men would be leaving the ship for good. Captain Crisji went to the Cape to discuss the problem of remanning the ship with the Dutch governor, Baron Joachim von Plettenberg, and to complain about those who had deserted.

After a few days, Captain Crisji returned to "Nicobar" with seven Lascars who had survived the wreck of the English East India Co. ship "Grosvenor," which had run aground the year before; several women who had also survived the wreck also came along. Captains of two other ships in False Bay at the time sent over four men apiece, and three others deserted their ships to join "Nicobar."

On July 10, after refitting and reprovisioning "Nicobar," the ship weighed anchor and sailed from False Bay in the company of another Danish ship, "Kroonprins." During that night, rough weather was encountered, a severe storm arose, and "Nicobar" was forced to sail closer to the shoreline than usual. During the morning of the 11th, "Nicobar" ran aground on a reef about 1.5 kilometers off Quoin Point, located near Cape Agulhas; the ship broke up fairly quickly in the heavy storm.

A total of 11 people were rescued from "Nicobar", seven Europeans (two of whom had joined the ship while at False Bay), three of the Lascars, and one of the women who earlier had survived the wreck of the "Grosvenor."

Arrangements were made by the Dutch East India Co. to recover goods washed ashore so they would be sold on behalf of the Danish East Indian Co., but others got to the scene of the wreck first. Inquiries revealed that farmers from the Stelltenbosch district had plundered the cargo that washed ashore. A few culprits were charged with theft, but not much else was done.

One crewman of the "Nicobar," M. Jörgensen, had been away from the ship when it sailed from False Bay, and he later attempted to recover records and other items from the wreck, but without success. He wrote an extensive account of this, the last, voyage of the "Nicobar" for the directors of the Danish East India Co., the greater part of this narrative is based on his account.

The rediscovery of the "Nicobar"

During the morning of Jan. 4, 1987, Louis Groenwald and Louis Chivell, longtime friends, diving companions, and residents of Gansbar, South Africa, went out for a spearfishing outing near Quoin Point. While swimming among the kelp, they noticed an object lying in a depression on the reef below, and, as both of them had done some salvage diving in the past, decided to investigate. They found some copper plates, a broken anchor, and, a short distance away, a cannon.

Groenwald and Chivell realized that they had discovered the wreck of an old ship and kept looking for more artifacts to bring to the surface which might help them identify the wreck. They discovered a total of 12 cast iron cannons and many more of the unusual rectangular copper plates — they brought four of these back with them for further study, hoping they might give some clue as to the identity of the shipwreck they had found.

One of the copper plates had five circular impressions stamped on it, one in each corner and in the center; these bore the date "1750" and "2 Daler." Checking various sources, they determined that the odd copper plates had been a form of money used in Sweden during the 17th and 18th centuries called klippingar ("clipped money") or more commonly platmynt ("plate money"). With this as a guide to the timeframe of the wreck, Groenwald and Chivell contacted Malcom Turner, a local historian who maintained extensive files on shipwrecks, and upon viewing the plate money, Turner advised the men that they had found the "Nicobar," a Danish East India Co. merchant ship which sank in 1783 while carrying cargo of pig iron and copper to the Nicobar Islands.

He told them that their find was unique: no one had ever found an East Indiaman which had been lost on the "Outbound" portion of the journey, that is, still carrying its European cargo.

Groenwald and Chivell then contacted Ms. Lalou Meltzer, numismatist of the South Africa Cultural Museum in Capetown; they discussed the importance of the find and the filing of claims and requests for permission to salvage the site of the wreck. Very shortly thereafter, a permit was granted for an in-depth survey of the site (with videos and photography) and the excavation of the coins.

Over the next weeks, Groenwald and Chivell, and a third companion, Jimmy Herbert, had "the time of their lives." They worked diligently to carefully survey the site before actually proceeding with any excavation work. Their timing for the photographic work couldn't have been better, as they had two days of fairly calm seas and reasonable visibility (most of the time the water is quite rough with very restricted visibility), a condition which occurs only 3-4 days per year on an average.

The wreck lay 1.75 to 2 kilometers from the shore near Quoin Point, and about 50 kilometers from Cape L'Aqulhas, the southernmost of Africa. The depths of the site ranged from 1 to 8 meters (3 to 20 feet), the main portion of the wreck being at 4.5 meters (15 feet).

From the start of excavation, the divers were positive of the identity of the ship; when it had been positively determined that the cargo was indeed pig iron and copper plates, and that the ship had 12 cannons, they found a match in old shipping documents. During the 1700's, all ships anchoring in False Bay were reported to the Cape by letter ("Inkomende briewe"); one of these dated May 13, 1783, contained "...Deensch Comp's schip NICOBAR zijnde den Julij passato van Copenhagen en den 13 Maart Laest L. van Christiaanburg gelegen op de Cust Guinee vertrokken, bemand met 35 kopen en gem't met 12 stukken cannon voorts gedestineert na Traneuebaar..."

They discovered a total of 12 cast iron cannons and many more of the unusual rectangular copper plates.

This document identified the "Nicobar" as having sailed from Copenhagen in July (of the previous year — 1782), sailing from the coast of Guinea (Ghana) on March 13, of having a crew of 35, having 12 cannons, and being bound for Tranquebar, the center of Danish trade in the Far East.

The actual evacuation brought several other interesting things to light from which some important assumptions were made, namely

1. Eight of the cannons were found very near the ballast and cargo, while four were situated a short distance away. As they had a general idea that "Nicobar" was a two-decked ship with a lower hold, it was assumed that eight cannons had been mounted on the main (first) deck, with the others mounted on the upper deck.

2. Most of the coins (two and four daler) were packed in the aft one-quarter of the hold; the smaller denomination coins (half and one daler) appear to have been stored higher in the aft section as these were recovered somewhat to the east and northeast of the main portion of the ballast and cargo site. Also of great interest was the fact that, for the first time, plate money had been found in the same context as when they had been packed into boxes for shipment. In one area, they found that straw had been packed between the plates; later research established that newly minted plate money was packed in wooden boxes in this fashion before being transported from the mint to the bank or other distribution center. Thus, it can be concluded, that many of the plate coins from the "Nicobar" had never been in circulation.

3. The large sheet anchor, normally used in desperate situations and normally stored in the hold of the 18th century ships, was found to be on the lee side of the ballast pile.

4. The bower anchors (smaller anchors used for day-to-day anchoring and use, of which several were usually carried as replacements), were found close together on the lee side near the bow of the wreck.

All in all, "Nicobar" yielded approximately 3,000 Swedish plate coins in the excavation process. These were taken to the Cultural History Museum for cleaning and study; Swedish numismatist Bertel Tingstrom, one of the experts on plate money, spent considerable time at the Museum studying the "Nicobar" plates and helping with the cataloging of the find. Due to the great national and international interest in the "Nicobar," the Cultural Museum retained about 50 of the recovered plates for its collection; the others became the property of the fortunate finders.

The finding of the "Nicobar" and its cargo has added greatly to our understanding of European trade with the East during the 18th century, and also to the greater understanding of the plate money of Sweden. Until the discovery of the "Nicobar", only about 11,000 plate coins were known to still exist; all of a sudden, this extant population increased by 3,000 or so.

Thus, after several years of cleaning, analysis, study, and sorting, these elusive examples of a very interesting numismatic experiment (which lasted over 130 years) are now more available to the general, and certainly the specialized, collector.

Finding a new variety or "Not in Brin"

By Henry T. Hettger

"Not in Brin," how many times has this term rung in your ears? It has been very much the case with new varieties of early U.S. coins such as half cents and large cents, and probably even bust silver halves and draped bust silver dollars, being unearthed and the finder being unable to locate the new coin in the customary variety handbooks. The early U.S. coins tend to be capable of easier organization by variety while many of the ancient coins are considered only as variants of a major variety rather than new varieties. Even a distinctive legend can yield the result of only a "variant" to the modern experts on Roman coins.

Two examples of a new variety from the stock of Superior Galleries. They are struck from different dies as evidenced by the smaller figures on the reverse of the higher grade specimen.

Henry·Cohen listed most coins as major varieties although a number are identified as sub-varieties under a single variety number in the Cohen handbook on Roman coins. For instance, Henry Cohen in his Volume 1 of his famous work on Roman coins, under the chapter on Vespasian lists a large number of varieties for the normal Judaea Capta sestertius type from Cohen 232 to 239 a and b. Mattingly in the Roman Imperial Coinage (RIC) lists only two varieties RIC 424 and 427 combining Cohen's listing into two main types. The Brin catalog has five main varieties of these two main types listed, which is a surprise as it is less than the number listed by Cohen. In fact Brin 45 which is designed to encompass both Cohen 239a and 239b utilizing in its description of Brin 45 the term "Ivdaea Capta Sc", the reverse type for Cohen 239a whereas the illustration for Brin 45 shows in actuality Cohen 239b with the legend "Ivdea Capta Sc". It is essential that the integrity of each variety be maintained as long as it can be proven to exist.

Howard B. Brin's new handbook, Catalog of Judaea Capta Coinage, has successfully organized this famous coinage of Vitellius, Vespasian, Titus and Domitian into a single volume in a systematic manner. Brin indicates that the existing handbooks on Roman coins have missed a few varieties, such as those missing in the collection of the British Museum. I have recently turned up two new varieties that have eluded Brin. It is suggested that readers carefully scrutinize their own collections to determine if additional new varieties are housed there. The study of coins in other collections available to the reader, dealers' stocks that can be examined and of course the prolific auction catalogs from around the world assist in the search for new varieties.

The first of these new variety finds surfaced in the stock of a major U.S. coin firm. It clearly uses the obverse legend of Cohen 233 or 236 and the reverse is clearly that of Cohen 239b. Interestingly, the coin is not unique. The same firm had two coins with identical obverse and reverse types as this in stock simultaneously.

However, the two coins are not from the same set of dies, the higher grade specimen having a smaller rendition of the figure of the woman seated to the right. On this higher grade coin, the woman's arm supports the upper part of the leaning head, whereas on the lower grade specimen with the larger figure, her hand from that arm rests under her chin, a slight difference of position.

Another fabulous find appears to be a coin available in an auction from a top Swiss firm. The coin is identified as very rare and of the variety known as Cohen 233. This attribution is incorrect as Cohen 233 has Vespasian's name spelled as Vespas rather than Vespasian as it appears on the coin in the photo, this being the more normal and common type usually seen and common to Cohen variety obverses on 232/234/238/239 while sporting a new reverse not listed by Cohen precisely, although it could be regarded as a legend variant of Cohen 234, with Ivdea Capta Sc clearly visible and only normally seen on Cohen 239b.

This is the first coin of this type ever encountered by the author over a 20 year span, although it is unknown whether it is unique.

Another interesting variety, in fact, a third main type was identified by Herbert A. Cahn in his article titled "Flaviana Inedita" which appeared in the Numismatic Chronicle and Journal of the Royal Numismatic Society for 1946. It is mentioned on page 11 and identified as #8, and utilizes the normal obverse for Cohen 233/236 and an entirely new reverse. On the left Vespasian stands to the right in military dress, left foot set on helmet, holding parazonium and vertical spear. To the right of the central palm-tree is the captive Jew standing left facing the emperor, his hands bound behind his back, a completely different concept from the reverse of Cohen 239. In this case, the male captive supplants the place of the female captive usually seen and this time she does not make an appearance at all. This unusual type has been public now for forty years and the author wonders if any duplicates have turned up of this rarity.

Additional new varieties will continue to turn up as the study of this interesting series of Roman coins expands to include ever more collectors and numismatists.

A rare piece from an auction held by Munzen and Medaillen AG in Switzerland. The legends have different spellings than those on the Cohen 233 type.

A male Jew stands on the reverse of this coin first reported in 1946 by Herbert A Cahn.

Should treasures be removed?

By Harlan J. Berk

When Roger Case asked me to write this column and told me he'd pay me, I realized I was finally a professional writer. Even though I had donated my salary to the ANS, I wanted to see if I could live on it. I found, to exist on it I'd have to room in a studio apartment, furnished with a double bed which included two roommates who were experts in wines of less than $2.00 a carafe, and were growing beards for a Santa Claus job in August.

In all seriousness, when I was nominated for "Best Column", an award I received from the Numismatic Literary Guild, Roger gave me these words of encouragement: "Harlan, it would be a great coup if you won after only three columns." "But Roger" I said, "I've written six." I guess he edited three of them down to where they'd fit in classified and didn't remember.

Now to business. The major, moral question confronting collectors and dealers in antiquities and ancient coins is, "Should coins and antiquities be removed from the countries of origin, and should we, in America, purchase them?" The question is a difficult one, but for me is simple: "Yes...and No."

No, we should not remove these objects from their country of origin if they are "National Treasures."

What is a "National Treasure?" In my opinion it is an object or coin which clearly defines and is typical of the best work done in that country itself in ancient times. To define this more clearly in logical progression, a tetradrachm of Athens from 430 B.C. is a national treasure or at least the first 2,000 of them are, but after that things change.

If the Athens museum has all the die representations it needs for its collection, and the other museums and universities in Greece have sufficient examples in their collections, then the rest are not "National Treasures." By the same definition, if a unique type of Athens coin, say a distater of Athens in gold should be discovered, it would be a "National Treasure." What should become of the 50,000 or so Athenian tetradrachums above a precious 2,000 which exist? Should they be placed in sacks and be stored in the basement of Greece's museums or should they become ambassadors; cultural lessons for Greece; builders of museums for Greece?

This seems an unusual and difficult task for an inanimate object, doesn't it? Think of this: in countries where people are living in conditions below what they feel, and actually are, substandard, they will, among other things, find coins and objects to smuggle out of the country to create income to live on.

If, as in England, coin finds could be taken to the local museum for study, with the museum buying what it needs for a collection at fair market, then releasing the rest to the finder, things would be better for everyone. The finder could sell the excess coins locally or internationally bringing him money, and the local museum would record all coins found in the area with the most significant staying there. The government could collect a percentage of tax from the proceeds of the sale of the excess coins to endow the preservation, display and study of true "National Treasures."

What of Ambassador status for these excess coins? They achieve this by being appreciated and loved by collectors world-wide. This can lead many collectors to making trips to these countries of origin thus increasing tourism, which is desirable for all countries in the world today.

I chose Greece, not to single her out, but just as a random example. But I believe this holds true for all source countries. If the source countries liberalize their laws and make the private collecting and trading of coins and antiquities "legal," then there are many wealthy Greeks, Italians and Turks, etc. who would buy these objects in America, Britain and Switzerland, etc. and repatriate them. There, in fact, might be a great repatriation of the best and an expatriation of lesser items. In addition, coins and antiquities normally smuggled out to be sold, might well never leave the country if they were legal to be traded there. It seems to me, the stringent laws in vogue force coins and antiquites out, and liberal laws would bring them in. For, after all, who would want an ancient Italian vase or coin more than an Italian, were he allowed to own and sell it as he or she pleases.

British Royal Mint sales set new record

The British Royal Mint has announced that total sales for the period April 1, 1988-March 31, 1989, reached their highest level ever at £95.2 million ($152.3 million). Profit for the year totaled £5.0 million ($8.0 million) while overseas business accounted for 63 percent ($96.64 million).

The "Annual Report" for 1988-1989, released recently in London, indicated that production levels also achieved new record highs, helping in large degree to compensate for the sharp deterioration in the investment climate for gold during the year.

During the period, the British Royal Mint struck coins for a total of 61 countries in addition to the United Kingdom. The mint's sales currently represent over 50 percent of the world market.

The number of circulating coins issued in the United Kingdom during the period was 80 percent higher than the average for the past five years and this, together with an increase in sales to overseas countries, contributed to the record production levels.

The medals business also performed well as did non-gold collector products. The 1989 £2 coin issued to commemorate the tercentenary of the Bill of Rights in England and the Scottish Claim of Right, has been particularly successful.

Commenting on the British Royal Mint's results, deputy master and chief executive, Anthony D. Garrett expressed his belief that the resilience of the mint's performance in difficult trading circumstances augurs well for the future.

"Overall business remains strong, with high demand for circulation coinage both in the U.K. and overseas, collector coins — other than gold — performing well and the medals business enjoying profitable growth. I am confident that 1989-1990 will see a good and growing level of profitability."

Garrett continued by emphasizing the importance of the United States and Canada markets. "My recent visit to the United States to receive the "Coin of the Year Award" for the Britannia on behalf of the mint, and to the recent ANA Convention in Pittsburgh served to underline the continuing regard in which collectors hold coins of the British Royal Mint. This recognition of the Royal Mint's efforts to maintain the high quality of its product is, indeed, extremely gratifying."

We will be leaving for Hong Kong on September 3rd so place your orders after that date in the evening after 6 p.m. Dallas time and my wife will fill them.

Thanks
DAP

Britannia proofs for sale

The British Royal Mint has announced that the 1989 Britannia gold proofs are now available to North American collectors.

The planned mintages for 1989 are even lower than last year. A total of 2,500 four-coin sets have been authorized for worldwide distribution, while 1,500 two-coin sets, containing the quarter-ounce and 10th-ounce coins, have been authorixed. This year no individual half-ounce or quarter-ounce proof Britannias will be issued and total mintages of the other denominations will be limited to only 1,000 individual one ounce proofs and 2,500 individual 10th ounce coins.

Struck in 22 karat "crown" gold, the Britannia is legal tender in the United Kingdom and is issued in four weights of one-ounce, half-ounce, quarter-ounce and 10th-ounce of pure gold. The face values are £100, £50, £25 and £10 respectively.

Prices of the 1989 Britannia Gold Proofs are:

Four-Coin Proof Set - $1595. (U.S.) - $1935. (CAN)

Two-Coin Proof Set - $340. (U.S.) - $412. (CAN)

One Ounce Coin - $875. (U.S.) - $1060. (CAN)

1/10 Ounce Coin - $100. (U.S.) - $121. (CAN)

The Golden Group of Hong Kong Today

By Tom Michael

In 1975 the British Royal Mint struck a lovely $1000 proof gold coin for Hong Kong commemorating a Royal Visit by Queen Elizabeth II. The issue price was $330. That was the beginning of a 14 coin run of commemorative $1000 proof gold Hong Kong issues which ended in 1987 with the "Year of the Rabbit" lunar coin.

Royal Visit 1975, the key.

From the beginning much has been said in the numismatic press about the investment potential of this series. Back in June 1975 WCN ran this quote from the Paramount Numismatic's Newsletter, "We believe the $1000 Royal Visit 1975 gold coin would have investment potential, but the issuance of the 12 Lunar New Year gold coins is just the financial secretary's gimmick to make up for his deficit budget and to fill up the government coffers." This quote brought us a letter from the Accountant General of Hong Kong, D.W.A. Blye. He cleared this misconception up fast by stating that, "over the 29 years since the end of World War II, this Government has only recorded 3 small budget deficits . . . the intention is that the proceeds from the Royal Visit coin issue will be used as a contribution towards the construction costs of a sports stadium." We can only venture a guess, but we suspect that if everyone that made money on this coin over the ensuing 15 years were to donate those profits to the same cause, several stadiums would be stacked on the soil of Hong Kong.

The 1975 Royal Visit issue is definitely the key coin of the series. It carries the lowest mintage and the highest value, though the 1976 Year of the Dragon coin runs a close second in both of these catagories. These two coins both sell for about six times their issue prices in todays reasonably quiet market. The 1983 Year of the Pig coin is also a standout as it has forced through its relatively high issue price of $599 to a present day value of about $1150.

Lunar 'Pig' 1983, the sleeper.

The 'flip lid' rosewood cabinet for housing the golden group was offered at $199.

While we are on the subject of reaping profits, we should mention that a fine rosewood cabinét was also offered by the Royal Mint for the display and storage of your $1000 coins. The case was designed to hold the 12 lunar coins in a circle with the two Royal Visit coins resting in the center. In 1986 this 10 inch square flip lid with drawer cabinet was offered for a price of $199.

Only two of the $1000 gold coins struck were in honor of the Queen's Royal Visits. The remaining twelve carry artist-sculptor Lady Elizabeth

Haddon-Cave's renderings of the creatures of the oriental calendar starting with the year of the dragon in 1976 and ending with the year of the rabbit in 1987. British Royal Mint officials originally determined to issue 14 coins in the $1000 series, the 14th coin was set to mark an undetermined important event which turned out to be a second Royal Visit by Queen Elizabeth II. Though at one time the Royal Mint may have considered continuing the series, recent agreements for the turnover of Hong Kong to the Chinese Government in 1997 would prohibit the completion of a second lunar series.

Lunar 'Dragon' 1976, runner up.

As far as the history of the lunar calendar is concerned, we have only legend to rely on. The story goes that Budha sent out word for all animals to join him in a grand New Years feast. This first New Years celebration was a dud however, as only 12 animals showed up. In honor of their attendance Budha named each year of a twelve year cycle after one of the animals present at his party.

Royal Visit 1986, 2nd for QE II.

This was certainly quite an honor and it is perhaps for this reason that the coins have generally faired well in value over the years. Maybe Budha watches over them, we don't know, but we do know their track record is good. We have compiled a small table showing the movement of this series from issue price to 1984 values and bringing you up to date with todays valuation's. As you can see, with only four exceptions the entire series has risen in value from issue price, and all but one have risen from their 1984 values. From this vantage of hindsight we can safely dispell all past predictions and recognize this series for the firm investment value it represents.

Lunar 'Rabbit' 1987, the tail end, has a long way to hop.

This "practically mint state" crown of William III brought over six times what a slightly lower grade realized.

By Allan Davisson

Are mint state British coins a good investment with long term growth potential? How have mint state British coins done historically when compared with rare but circulated British coins?

The quick and easy answers to these questions are "Mint state British are probably a reasonable coin investment given the general acceptance in the marketplace of coins as investment vehicles and the accessibility of the British series to American collector/investors" and, to the second question, "Rarity of type and issue has historically been the most important issue for British coins but exceptional condition has always commanded some price premium."

More specific answers to these questions can be found in auction catalogs and publications.

Two of the most important collections of British coins ever assembled were sold around the turn of the century. In 1895 and 1896, Sotheby's sold the collection of Hyman Montagu with the observation that "Never before has such a collection been offered for public sale." Montagu was someone whose knowledge and "pecuniary means...enabled him to take advantage of any opportunity that might present itself. The John Murdoch collection sold in 1903 and 1904 was rated "Second only to Mr. Montagu's." These sales, along with "Spink Circulars" from that era include coins in exceptional condition as well as coins that were rare.

At the turn of the century when the Montagu and Murdoch collections were sold, exceptional condition was prized less highly than rarity. Outstanding coins might sell for twice the amount of a similar piece in very fine condition. Extremely fine coins were typically similar to coins that would be graded AU50 to AU55 by current U.S. grading standards, so a coin that rated superlatives from the catalogers of that time would have been a "wonder" coin in terms of condition.

Dealers who have been making a market in mint state British coins were still able to take advantage of this in the late 1970's. Even then a conservative British "EF" could often turn out to be an "As struck" coin.

The Montagu sale provides several comparisons. An Edward VI 1551Y crown "in brilliant condition" sold for £39/10 (39 pounds and 10 shillings) while a 1552 tun crown graded "extremely fine" brought £36. Crowns of Elizabeth provide another worthwhile comparison. A 1601 issue, "rare and one of the finest specimens known" brought £13/15 while a 1602 issue, "very fine and vary rare" brought £6/17/6 (6 pounds, 17 shillings and 6 pence).

Murdoch had an Edward III gold noble "in beautiful preservation and rare in this state" that brought £11 while a piece of the same type described as "fine and scarce" brought £4. A James II five guineas "brilliant and very rare, almost equal to a proof" brought

Not much difference, except in price, for this nice crown of William III sold by Spink in the Manville sale.

£17 while the same type "very fine but slightly scraped beneath bust" brought £6/10. A "brilliant and scarce" 1687 crown brought £2/6 while an "equally fine though not so brilliant" piece brought £1/8 and an "extremely fine and scarce" 1688 crown brought £1/4.

Spinks offered comparable material at the time. A 1653 Commonwealth crown, "a beautiful coin, FDC" brought £5 and Cromwell pieces described as "a superb crown, the flaw showing very little, FDC" brought £6. A listing of Northumberland shillings offered four grades: FDC for 15 shillings; EF for 10/6 (10 shillings and six pence); VF for 7/6, and a fine example for five shillings. The relatively common 1787 shilling could be purchased in FDC for two shillings and an EF for 1/6. A direct comparison is possible in a 1902 offering of a Cromwell shilling FDC for £6 or VF for £4/15.

An important and extensive collection of crowns sold in 1946 in the Paget sale. An EF Elizabeth I 1601 crown sold for £16/10; the next lot, similar, described as "a beautiful specimen," sold for £17;

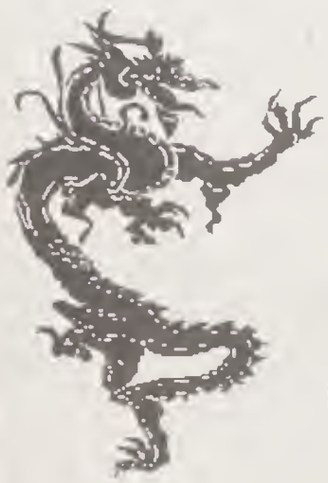
THE ONLY ORIGINAL & GENUINE

HONG KONG INTERNATIONAL COIN EXPO

will be held

MAY 10 - 13, 1990

Golden Mile Holiday Inn
Kowloon, Hong Kong



The proven best gets even better in '90!

Our 9th Annual Extravaganza in Hong Kong is loaded with new features and programs — and you can avoid the high costs of other travel programs to Hong Kong!

Once again THE MONEY COMPANY AND HKICE will bring you a fabulous travel bargain package — competition is not even close.

SPECIAL NOTE: The Hong Kong Show NOT sanctioned by the ANA — and extremely proud of it! Again, as for the past eight years, we will stage our Hong Kong Expo with the assistance of The Hong Kong Numismatic Society. "HKNS" — The trusted name, and the right name, for Hong Kong!

"We'll see you at the Real Show — Hong Kong 1990"

AN IMPORTANT STATEMENT OF POLICY BY THE MANAGEMENT OF THE HK INT'L COIN EXPO

In 1990 HKICE will not offer a post-convention tour to mainland China (PRC/Communist China) as in previous years. Nor will we offer such a post-convention tour to China in future years, as long as the current repressive government is in power. We will however offer instead incredible post-convention tours to the most exciting and exotic locales in the Far East and South East Asia — where you may enjoy "once-in-a-lifetime" experiences among the friendliest freedom-loving peoples. Watch for further information concerning these marvelous HKICE post-convention events.

Please support the students of China — help them restore freedom and democracy to the largest country on earth!

Food for Thought:

Here's more fact than fortune.

The ANA is an active force in numismatics. We are using our voice to influence many controversial issues. And the strength of that voice comes from every one of our members. Membership is an important role that adds to our collective power.

Robert J. Leuver, Executive Director, was one of four to recently speak before the House Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage. His testimony on behalf of our 34,000 members proved ANA's support of new coinage designs.

The ANA also was instrumental in amending a bill that threatened Florida's numismatic world. In addition to providing technical and legal advice, the ANA made a financial contribution to the fight against such devastating legislation.

Pennsylvania and Colorado are just two states where we've taken a stand against sales tax on numismatic items.

The prestige and integrity of the ANA reaches throughout the world. As the leader in numismatics, the ANA has taken a proactive position to keep the hobby undiminished and unrestricted. You can add your support by becoming a member.

ANA membership allows you to play an active part in your hobby. Call ANA toll-free and lend your voice to numismatics.

Power and knowledge become stronger with your ANA membership.

the next lot, similar coin, "very fine and toned," sold for £12/10 and the next lot, another similar coin, graded only "fine, a slight crack in flan" realized £7. A 1653 Commonwealth crown, "a beautiful coin in mint state," sold for £17 while two similar pieces, both graded "very fine" sold for £9/15 and £7. Other mint state crowns in the sale — and there were not very many of them — showed similar condition premiums. The stars of the sale were rare pattern crowns.

Exceptionally high grade early English coins are rare. Several hours studying old auction catalogs and dealer lists turned up very few hammered and early milled coins that rate glowing terms and an FDC grade. If anything, exceptional large silver has become more scarce since these epochal turn of the century sales. The extensive and important Lockett Collection did not include milled material. The hammered crowns and half crowns were generally EF at best. Spink and Seaby catalogs from the late 1960s and early 1970s list almost no exceptional material of this type. Perhaps the best material was selling by private treaty — still often the case and one reason why market research does not tell you all you would like to know about trades and prices.

During the 1970s the usual "rule of thumb" for coins that were priced in the Seaby catalog in VF was to double the price for an extremely fine example.

This William and Mary halfcrown realized £1,700 at a 1980 Spink sale.

Cope and Rayner's 1975 publication citing rarity of milled coins in different grades rated coins in Fair, F, VF, EF, and As Struck (AS) with a rating scale ranging from C3 (extremely common) up to R7 (unique). High levels of rarity for "EF" and "AS" are the rule for almost everything issued before the 19th century. Their price guide, published in December 1978, generally suggests prices in "AS" that are double the prices estimated in "EF"

By the late 1970s numerical grading had become the rule in U.S. coins. The 1982 9th edition of Bressett's Guide Book of English Coins rated British milled coins in "Unc" and "Ch Unc" condition. This publication dealt only with the 19th and 20th centuries. Such coins as a Victoria "Young Head" crown were cataloged at $500 in EF, $2,750 in Unc. and $5,500 in Ch. Unc. Earlier material has not been systematically valued in grades higher than EF by any of the major catalogs issued for the English series.

Spink's early auctions in 1979 and 1980 list very few pieces in exceptional condition, but when they were offered, prices were strong. A William and Mary halfcrown, 1690, "practically as struck, most attractively toned and extremely rare in this condition" was estimated at £700 in a 1980 sale but it realized £1,700. A similar piece, "about very fine", estimated at £125 brought £160. Coins Market Values 1980 valued the coin at £175 in VF and £550 in EF that year. A William III 1695 crown in the Manville sale described as "practically mint state, attractively toned" estimated at £700 brought £2,200 while a comparable type "about extremely fine" estimated at £500 brought £360.

While prices in 1980 were near an all-time peak because of investor interest in collectibles as a hedge against double digit inflation, the relationships are particularly interesting because they demonstrate a departure from the usual relationship between condition and price. Ratios between "EF" and "As struck" jumped from the 2:1 ratio that described most earlier British material, to a 5:1 or 10:1 ratio depending on the coin and the level of "perfection".

My own experience in buying British material reflects this. Several English dealers emphasize coins in exceptional condition, and prices for such issues are several times the price for EF examples of the same pieces. The recent articles in the coin press that talk about opportunities in high grade British coinage are 10 years too late in some respects. The multiples in value for high grade pieces have been in place for a decade.

Yet, in looking back over old issues of "gray sheet" and "Red Book," my sense is that mint state grading and premium prices for British material are about at the point of U.S. coins in the early 1980's. The detailed census data on various U.S. mint state issues is almost totally lacking with British material. Cope and Rayner's book is the only effort I am aware of to systematically evaluate rarity by condition. Their discriminations are principally useful for circulated coins and were based on experience and memory more than specific data.

I do not know whether all this will translate into a market that is as reliable for mint state British coins as it is for mint state U.S. coins. Personally, I have two problems with it. The first is my own predilections as a dealer concerned primarily with collecting and collectors. From that point of view, the traditional criteria of historical importance, type and numismatic condition is my principal concern. Many important coins are unknown in uncirculated or even good extremely fine condition.

My other problem is the same problem that those who want to invest in the series have. How much can I reasonably pay for these "wonder coins?" A detailed library helps somewhat. I can see how seldom certain coins are offered. But are coins like these primarily oriented to investors rather than collectors? Will limited availability curtail the establishment of a broad based market for material of this type? Yet I work with collecotrs who want only mint state coins. I have found their interest to be consistent and their grading — strict. I take great pleasure in handling the occasional "mint state" coin.

Historically, collecting with condition as the primary focus represents a new direction with British coins. The supply, particularly of pre-20th century material, is thin and the supply of pre-19th century material is thinner still. For many collectors, it is an expensive direction that will frustrate them as they develop their collection but for others it may offer a challenge and an opportunity.

Collectors who fear that it will take them out of the market probably do not have any worry — prices for circulated material seem to be independent of the price multiplication for mint state coins. And the dealers who handle collector oriented material will continue to do so.

Major English dealers who have been established for decades or even centuries continue to focus on what has always been their central concern — coins for collectors emphasizing rarity, history, beauty and numismatic interest.

Suriname honors Olympic hero

The British Royal Mint has announced that a limited number of special 22-karat gold and sterling silver proofs, struck to celebrate the Olympic victory of Suriname swimmer Anthony Nesty, are currently available to North American collectors. Nesty won the gold medal in the 100 meters butterfly event in te Olympic record time of 53.00 seconds. His victory brought Suriname its first Olympic medal and its first gold medal in any sport.

Suriname, formerly known as Dutch Guiana, is situated on the northeast coast of South America, and has an area of about 46,000 square miles with approximately 240 miles of coastline. Suriname was discovered by Spain but settled by the British in 1651. However, 16 years later, it was ceded to Holland. It changed hands a number of times and finally became a Dutch colony in 1816. Suriname became independent in 1975.

Created by British Royal Mint engraver Robert Elderton and struck in 22-karat gold, the 500 guilders gold proof commemorative and the 50 guilders silver proof bear different reverse designs, both depicting Nesty competing in the Olympic Games, in Seoul 1988. Both coins bear the inscription Olympic Games Seoul 1988 together with the value, set in an outer circle around the circumference, while the name of Anthony Nesty and the event are located at the top and bottom of the design respectively.

Only 2,000 gold frosted proofs and 25,000 silver proofs have been authorized. The common obverse design features Suriname's national coat of arms, depicting a sailing ship and a palm tree set upon an oval shield supported by two Indians. The Latin motto Justitia, Pietas, Fides translates as "Justice, Piety, Faith."

The 500 guilders gold proof weighs 7.98 grams and has a diameter of 22.05 millimeters while the crown sized 50 guilders silver proof has a weight of 28.28 grams and a diameter of 38.61 millimeters.

Swimmer gets gold again on this 500 guilders.

Offered in handsome presentation cases, each gold or silver proof is accompanied by an information leaflet. Prices of the 1988 Suriname Olympic coins are:

500 Guilders Gold Proof $225.00 (US) $273.00 (Can)

50 Guilders Silver Proof $44.00 (US) $54.50 (Can)

Special first-day cover for the Numismatic Society of Bolivia

Crude but interesting eight reales of 1820 with assayers' initials "PJ"

Interesting Bolivian items noted

By B. T. Moose III

The Bolivian postal authority recently issued a one Boliviano blue and gold commemorative stamp on Feb. 9 of this year featuring a ¼ sol dated 1852 struck in gold. The normal silver issue is listed as KM#111 in the 1990 edition of Standard Catalog of World Coins. A special first day cancellation and cachet was prepared for the Numismatic Society of Bolivia according to George Lill III of Morton Grove, Illinois who is their North American representative.

While on the subject of Bolivia a rather crude looking eight reales of Ferdinand VII dated 1820 PJ crossed my path. A quick glance and you would almost automatically turn to the listings in your Standard Catalog for the War of Independence in Mexico, period 1810-21. Although the mint mark is worn from this piece measuring 39.5 millimeters, you will soon discover that the assayers "PJ" were only active during this period at the Bolivian mint located at Potosi.

A further check of specific gravity revealed a low silver content of only about .350 fineness. The piece has a good ring to it and the hole lowered the weight to only 25.78 grams but evidence of considerable wear proves that contemporary counterfeits could have circulated easily side by side with the rash of crude insurgent issues being cobbled out of the various Mexican mints during this period. As counterfeits go, this one may possibly have quite a tale to tell if it could only speak, especially about the "anti Royalist?" entrepreneur that created it.

Catalina trade dollar

Catalina Island issues trade dollar

A one dollar trade token has been issued for the island of Santa Catalina. It is struck in copper-nickel and is larger than a silver dollar at 39 millimeters in diameter.

The obverse of the trade dollar shows whales, dolphin and seals, some of the more interesting and popular sealife that can be found on or near the island at various times of the year. Surrounding the animals is a sunrise. Near the center of the coin is the islands name, "Santa Catalina."

The reverse depicts the issuing authority "Trade Dollar Association Inc." with four stars near the rim. In the center of the piece is a large stylized "One" expressed both numerically and alphabetically. Just below it are the words "Good For One Dollar In Trade At Participating Merchants During" and the date "1989" directly below in larger type.

It is expected that many of these pieces will be transformed into jewelry by the local artisans of the island and many will leave the island as souveniers.

Initial response from many of the local merchants and visitors has been overwhelming and plans are currently being formulated for an annual issue (thus creating a collectable series).

The trade dollars are being distributed through the local merchants. All funds received from the sale and distribution of the trade dollars is being put into a special fund. At the end of the year, a portion of the proceeds will be given to the Santa Catalina Chamber of Commerce to help promote tourism of the island.

The trade dollars may be purchased from participating merchants on the island for $1 each or may be ordered (in units of five pieces for $5 plus $1 shipping and handling) by mail directly from Continental Coin Corp., 5626 Sepulveda Blvd., Van Nuys, Calif. 91411.

Ancients and better world coins hot at ANA

Who says that the raw coin market is dead?

One of the more popular areas for collectors during the American Numismatic Association convention did not involve sonically sealed plastic holders or uncirculated coins. In fact, activity in U.S. coins sometimes looked sluggish when compared to ancient coins.

"We did more business with ancients than we did with U.S. coins," stated Larry Goldberg of Beverly Hills, Calif. "It has been unbelievable. We sold 75 percent of the ancients we brought with us."

Edward Waddell of Bethesda, Md., observed "a fair number of people looking for ancients. Any high-quality Greek silver, Roman bronze or Roman silver coin was in demand. A lot of collectors were asking for Byzantine coins in bronze or gold, and that is an emerging area."

Veteran hobbyists in other areas are looking at ancients, Waddell said.

"We regularly get calls from collectors who are considering ancients," he noted. "These are true collectors who have a serious interest in numismatics, and they are disgusted with the pricing and grading structure for U.S. coins."

He continued, "Most purchasers of ancient coins buy them for the art and history, and they hold the coins for a long time, rather than looking for a short-term trading profit. Ancients are more related to academics and fine art than the traditional numismatic market."

There is worldwide demand for ancient coinage, Waddell said.

"One concern that a lot of people have about the U.S. market is that it is uniquely American and controlled by a small number of dealers," he stated. "Ancients are also popular in Europe and Japan."

Demand was up for choice world coins, stated Doug Cox of Northport, Ala.

"In the past year and a half, the junk sold, but the better coins didn't move," he said. "Better material was selling at the ANA. Collectors wanted European coins primarily, but anything that was really nice sold."

When asked if a new trend in the foreign market was emerging, Cox replied, "It's hard to say, because it was just one show."

Said David Cannon of Cincinnati, "Anything that isn't commercial, the type of material that is not common, was selling, as were high-grade coins."

He sees "a two or three-tier system in foreign coins, just like the U.S. market. The foreign coin field is still dominated by collectors, but investment is growing."

Certification of Canadian coins and the prospect of slabbing other world coins in the future will "have a long-term effect" on prices, Cannon predicted. He saw "more new customers buying foreign coins and testing the market" at the ANA convention.

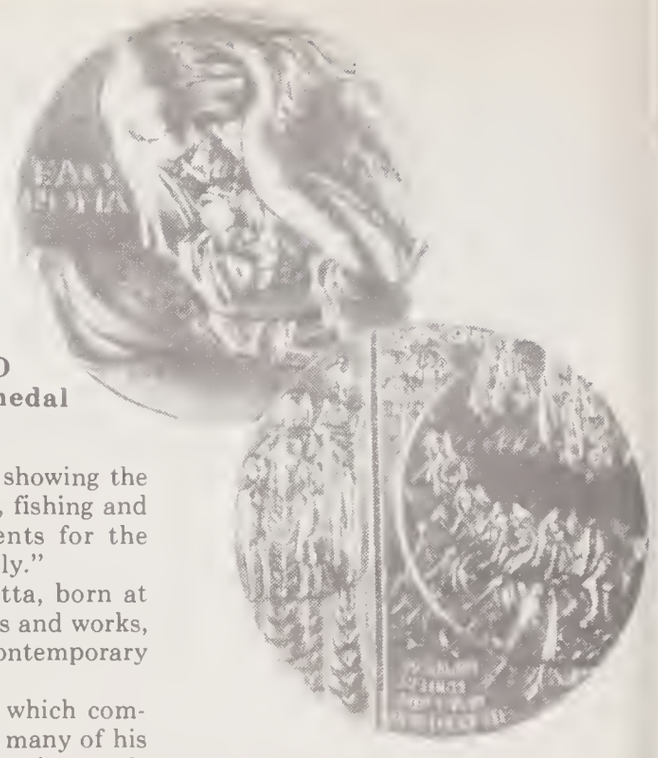
FAO issues conference medal



New FAO medal

July 1989 marks the 10th anniversary of the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, held at the Food and Agriculture Organization headquarters in Rome in 1979. A special medal has been issued honoring this conference, which was a historic event in the life of the organization, and can be considered a milestone in the long, hard struggle to eradicate poverty and hunger in the world.

The World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development was the first international conference to analyze the problems of development in an integrated, global manner, calling on governments, individuals and international organizations to work at all levels to face the challenge of rural development to ensure that the dream of producing food for all becomes a reality.

On the obverse of this medal the artist has represented the theme of "our first food" through the warmth of maternal affection.

The 10th anniversary of the World Conference for Agrarian Development and Rural Reform (1979-1989) is represented on the reverse by sections, divided by the number 10, showing the development of agriculture, fishing and forests — essential elements for the progress of the "Rural Family."

The artist, Enore Pezzetta, born at Buia in Friuli where he lives and works, is among the most noted contemporary Italian sculptors.

His work as a medallist, which commenced in 1976, is intense; many of his works appear in public and private collections in Italy and abroad.

The medal is available in the following metals and sizes:

Bronze, 50 mm, US$25

Silver, .925 fine 60 grams, 0 mm., US$65

Gold, .750 fine (18 carat) 14.5 grams, 8 mm. US$340

The medals for public sale will be struck in limited edition. Only 500 gold, 1000 silver and 2000 bronze medals will be available worldwide. Each medal is numbered on the rim and accompanied by a certificate of guarantee. Orders will be filled on a strictly sequential bases. Write FAO Medals, 1001 22nd St. NW, Suite 300, Washington DC 20437.

Zug
¼ taler

I have a rather worn coin which I can't identify. About all I can decipher is the abbreviation for "TUGIVM." Is that any help?

With that clue it's at least possible to tell you where your coin originated as TUGIVM is the Latin spelling for Zug, a small city in Switzerland between Zuerich and Lucerne. Zug struck coins for 251 years, from 1564 to 1805.

I know that "schnecken" in German means "snail," but is there really a "schneckentaler?"

The Swiss city of Zug struck a "schneckentaler" in 1565, as a variety of the earlier "blumentaler," or flower taler. Both the coins depicted St. Michael standing, the flower taler with a bunch of flowers between his feet, and on the snail taler the flowers were replaced with a snail, hence the nickname.

I have some coins of Yemen which I collected many years ago. Recently while cataloging them I noticed that those I have labled as "bogash" are listed as "buqsha." What has changed?

I can't trace the original source, but for many years the early reference works on the coins of Yemen referred to the denomination as "bogash." It wasn't until relatively recently that it was determined that the correct spelling is "buqsha."

What is all the fuss about the 1969 Japanese mint sets? I recently saw one offered for sale for $800.

FORUM

Our 1990 catalog lists the set at $250, but reports of a flurry of sales of the sets at higher prices are coming in. This set poses a distinct and potentially dangerous problem for the collector. It is packaged in a plastic which is loaded with damaging PVC, which may already have ruined the coins. If they are removed from the envelope, there is absolutely no way of identifying them as being any different from an uncirculated business strike, which retail for a small fraction of the set price. This is another case of an artificial value being applied to the packaging rather than the coin, and not only is this packaging hazardous to the coin set, it is far easier to fake than the coins would be. It's an object lesson in why I stress buying the coin, not the package.

In a discussion of coins used in the Philippines in the 19th century, there is a mention of "rebel coins." Surely this doesn't refer to rebels in the Philippine islands, or does it?

"Rebel coins" in this case refers to those from Spanish colonies which had rebelled against Spain. By decree, coins from those countries, such as Mexico, Peru, Colombia, etc. had to be counterstamped in order to circulate in the Philippines. Various counterstamps were used from 1828 to 1837 when the practice was abolished after Spain began to recognize the new independent countries.

Rebel coin

Did you have your facts straight in the answer that you gave to that Courland coin question recently?

Samuel Lachman pointed out that in answering the question I mangled the facts by not clearly stating that there are five different gold coins of Courland, each with the same ducat denomination, but struck by four different rulers. The five are; Jacob Kettler dated 1646, Fredrich Casimir — 1689. Ernst Johann — one with small, one with large bust — 1764 and Peter Biron — 1780. This is yet another case where reader input is gratefully acknowledged and appreciated.

Carnegie offers coin course

In conjunction with the "Coins From the Carnegie Collection" exhibit, The School of The Carnegie is offering two adult courses for budding numismatists. On Saturday, Sept. 24, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m., a representative from the American Numismatic Association (ANA) will present a slide lecture entitled "Coins and The Carnegie." From Oct. 2 through Oct. 30, John Burns of the ANA will teach a five-session class entitled "Introduction to Collecting Coins" on Monday evenings from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m.

The public is invited to bring old "pocket change" to the museum for identification on Saturday, Aug. 26, from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Coins will be identified by representatives from local coin clubs.

Coins, bank notes, medals, uncut currency, primitive and prehistoric money, campaign buttons, and streetcar tokens will be among hundreds of items exhibited by The Carnegie Museum of Natural History from Aug. 8 through Oct. 15, 1989. Coins From the Carnegie Collection was organized by the Western Pennsylvania Numismatic Society in conjunction with The Carnegie Museum of Natural History.

Exhibit highlights are pieces of the famed George H. Clapp large cent collection. In addition, early U.S. Mint medals, medieval currency, Chinese knife money (circa 500-220 B.C.), and a Philip V eight-reales silver cob from Mexico are part of the exhibit. Local tokens, medals, forgeries, and prison money will also be displayed.

"Coins From the Carnegie Collection" is open during regular museum hours: Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.; Friday from 10:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m.; and Sunday from 1:00 to 5:00 p.m. General admission to The Carnegie is $4 for adults, $2 for children and students. Members are admitted free at all times.

Singapore sets now available

The Singapore Mint will release two coin sets in July 1989. The issues are the 1989 one cent thru $1 sterling silver proof coin set and the uncirculated mint set. Both come housed in packaging that is unique and reconizably Singaporean.

The 1989 (one cent-$1) sterling-silver proof coin set comprises six proof coins in denominations of one cent, five cent, 10 cent, 20 cent, 50 cent and $1. These are the proof versions of the coins which are currently circulating in the republic and are struck in proof sterling silver.

The designs on the reverse of the coins bear flora motifs. These are one cent — Vanda Miss joaquim, five cent — fruit salad plant, 10 cent — star jasmine, 20 cent — powder—puff plant, 50 cent — yellow allamanda and $1 — periwinkle. The obverse of the coins bears the Singapore arms. Both the 10 cent and 50 cent coin now have an edge marking similar to that of the $1 coin.

The coins are individually encapsulated and packaged in a red velvet bound casing with gold plated corner clips. the color of the velvet is chosen to represent the state colors of red and white. The gold plated Singapore arms is embellished on the front cover. Each of the 15,000 sets in the mintage is serially numbered and accompanied by a certificate of authenticity.

The concurrent release is the brilliant uncirculated mint set of the republic. Six coins in the denominations of one cent, five cent, 10 cent, 20 cent, 50 cent and $1 are struck in uncirculated condition and set within a red background of the island republic. The packaging features a commemoration of 1989 as the "Year of the Snake" in the Chinese almanac. A description of a person born in this year of the snake completes the set. Again, the color scheme of the packaging is red and white, visibly the state colors.

Traditionally, the uncirculated coin set is released together with the $10 lunar coins before the lunar new year. This will be the first time that the uncirculated coin set is released together with the proof set. Mintage is set at 70,000 for worldwide release.

More information can be obtained from the Singapore Mint at 249 Jalan Boon Lay, Singapore 2261. The coins are available from the Mint's distributors at Panda America Corporation, 23326 Hawthorne Blvd, Torrance, CA 90505 (for USA) and Taisei Stamps & Coins Co., Ohno Building 1-19-8 Kyobashi, Chuo-Ku, Tokyo 104, (for Japan).

THANK YOU

To all of those who helped make the

September Hong Kong International Coin Show and Auction

A great success!

A special thanks for the support received from M. Louis Teller of Encino, California, who was the first dealer to sign up for a bourse table ... and to the approximately 100 additional coin dealers, mints, publications, etc. who have made the "sold out" bourse the largest coin show ever held in Hong Kong. Thanks also to all of the consignors who have helped to make our multi-million dollar auction one of the most outstanding numismatic sales ever conducted in Hong Kong.

We look forward to September 6-8, 1990
in the hope of doing even better!
